Why is my do-over (Julian Bassman) best for everyone? Explain:
(This is actually a secondary thing to remember when doing backwards time travel law):

1. Well I did some thinking about my life and having a non-regrettable one can help people not have traumatizing or continuous regret if they prove to cling to when it happened or had gotten one chance at it
2. Because of how I was treated, making better choices could create better environments
3. Even if a person does have insecurities that are being angry or jealous, fixing what led to them can be a good help as long as it doesn't lead to anything dangerous or prevent them from learning life lessons when actually needed
4. Sometimes living with a mess can lead to long-term consequences
5. Mistakes can help growth but sometimes when they or others aren't careful enough, it is something to have on your conscience depending on the person and their psychological make-up
6. People deserve a life that they don't regret, and if they do prove to feel out of place, they do need to still achieve that life and goals on their own and prevent mistakes and will need to learn everything in life there is to learn but a good life for you and others is important
7. In Every Witch Way Season 4, Emma did use the Tambian Orb to send Daniel back to the Everglades as well as his memory being wiped of any trauma that happened. Note that she managed to do it where anyone that wouldn't want a time travel use risk weren't affected
8. Everyone's psychological makeup is different. Most people are okay living with consequences, moving forward, and continuing on, but others might prove helpful if they get a second chance to undo their mistakes. It doesn't have to be done, but it has to be looked into depending on how much they are clinging to it. As healthy and common as moving on and processing that grief is, it is helpful to recognize that sometimes trying to make things right matters more if a chance is possible. The chance doesn't have to be done but it does need to be looked into if it fully proves best for them and possibly for everyone else.
9. And I'm not saying you have to nor should you make changes, but if those changes are helpful to yourself and everyone around you, then that is when it's great

Don't worry,

*"Committee members, we must not mistake moving forward with moving on. A majority of our citizens are resilient, but resilience is a process, not a given. When a citizen is carrying a profound crisis of conscience, forcing them to simply 'live with it' without an outlet is dangerous. It breeds invisible, long-term psychological erosion. *

By introducing a conscience-based scan as a prerequisite for time transit, we aren't guaranteeing a redo. We are creating a diagnostic tool. The system evaluates the weight of the burden. If the scan shows that a brief, non-disruptive closure visit will prevent a lifetime of psychological damage, it must be considered an essential healthcare option. And if the system determines the use fails or is impossible, the machine safely stops it. We are not forcing the use—we are forcing the system to responsibly consider the human conscience."
